The contrast between the confrontational tone and the mood in Turkey as a whole, however, is striking. In recent months, demonstrators have taken to the streets of Istanbul, Ankara, Izmir, Adana, Istanbul, and other cities in protest against

Erdogan, his ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP), and the austerity policies that have provoked widespread anger across the country. Much of the public in Turkey, however, appears to be not just unenthusiastic about such protests but even about the very notion of demonstrations. When the protests started on May 31, 2015, many Turks were enraged at the mismanagement of the economy and the ever-worsening standard of living. They also feared the impact of austerity policies, which were being implemented at the time, on the government's plans to dramatically increase the power of the executive branch and undermine the central role of the judiciary. Today, though, many Turks seem to be adopting
